Edison pays Upland students a visit

By Paula Monarez

The children listened intently as Thomas Edison described how after 8,999 tries he had finally found a light bulb that worked.

"After 45 hours, we decided to turn it off because we knew we had discovered the right combination," the white-haired inventor said.

No, this was not the 1870s, but more than a hundred years later.

And those eager students were not sitting in a one-room schoolhouse, but the cafeteria of Baldy View School in Upland.

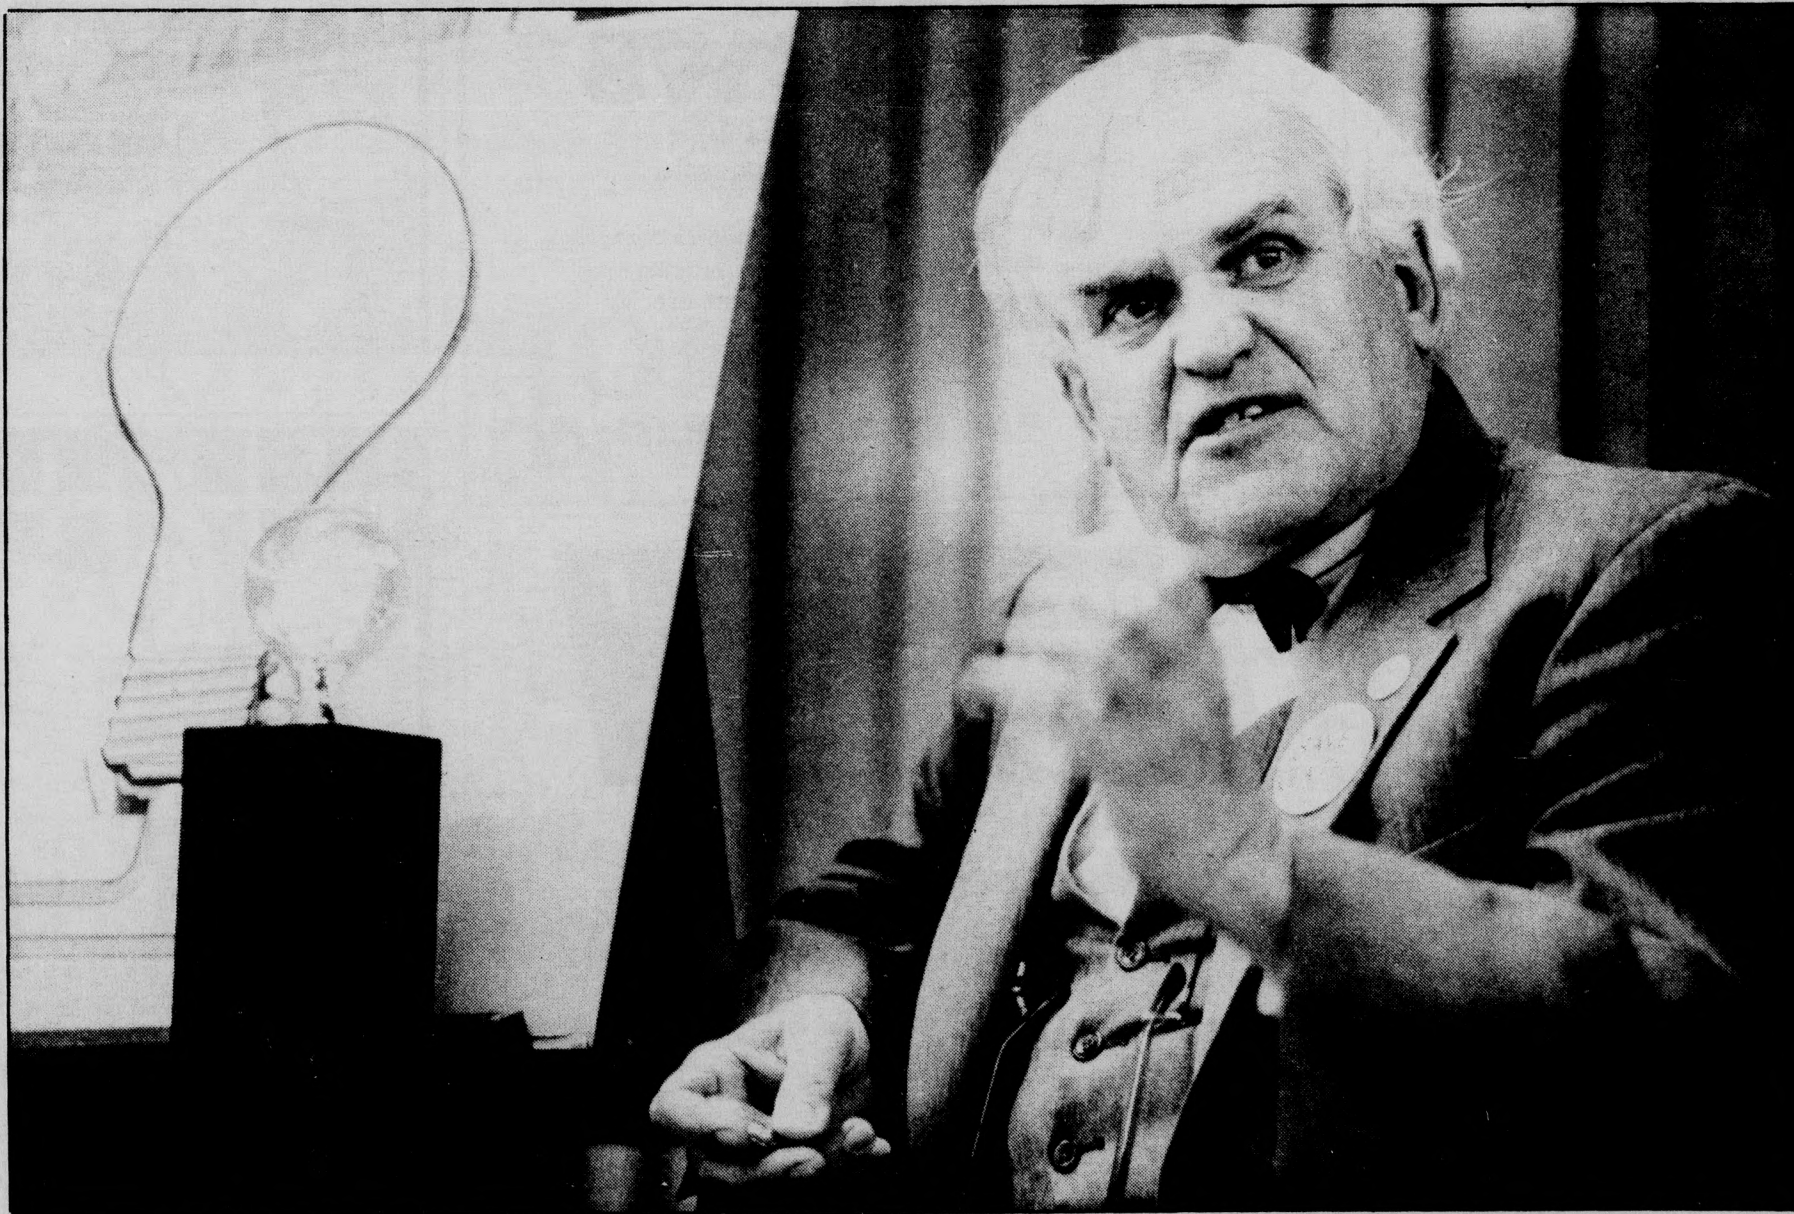

Finally, the portly old gentleman on the stage was really not one of America's greatest inventors (although he looked and sounded real enough), but actor Drew Wilson.

For the past four years, the former Torrance art teacher has taken his Edison act to stages throughout the Southland.

Noting the enthusiastic responses of audiences, last year Southern California Edison hired Wilson to portray the inventor at various schools in the area in honor of the company's centennial celebration.

Last week, Wilson visited the GATE (Gifted and Talented Education) students from Baldy View.

During the hourlong program, Wilson, as Edison, told students how the electric light, the phonograph, the

"He even tells them how he lost his hearing after a conductor pulled him up on the train by the ears," said Corky Skvarna, the Upland Unified School District's GATE resource facilitator. "And he actually shows them how a

Upland drops YMCA issue from calendar

By Kimberly Heinrichs

After hearing emotional pleas two meetings in a row against putting a YMCA in Memorial Park, Upland's City Council voted last week to drop the issue from its calendar.

The council voted 3-0 to request the YMCA board of directors select an alternative to the busy park on Foothill Boulevard for its planned 33,000- to 40,000-square-foot building.

Two council members — Mayor Richard Anderson and Councilman Al Canestro — abstained from voting because of a possible conflict of interest from their positions as YMCA board members.

Although Councilwoman

Rosalie Kamansky's husband Joe also is a board member, the Fair Political Practices Commission did not determine a conflict of interest on her part.

The council also requested that the YMCA present a detailed building plan in a presentation at its May 18 meeting.

YMCA General Director Bob Heuther has said the building will include basketball courts and an Olympic-sized pool.

The building was proposed for the northwest corner of Memorial Park in 1980, but was rejected then because of possible interference with other activities there.

Nearby residents told council members the last two weeks that the new building would bring parking problems, overcrowding and crime to their quiet streets.

Some also criticized the possible spending of city money to cover the flood control channel immediately to the west of the park and build a road there, giving San Antonio Community Hospital better access to Foothill Boulevard.

generator works. He's (Wilson) terrific."

Not only did he inform students, but Wilson challenged them with questions, concerning Edison's invention.

At the end of the program, the students were given a step-by-step folder that showed how they too could become inventors.

"He's trying to show them that they too can reach their potential," Skvarna said. "That they should never give up and try, try again just like Edison did." □

Upland resident receives award from Cal Poly

George Jones of Upland has been selected as an Outstanding Employee of the fall 1986 quarter at Cal Poly Pomona's physical plant department.

Jones, a groundsworker in the plant's landscape services division for four years, is responsible for maintenance of the grounds around the campus' child care center, foundation building and Bronco Bookstore.

In a recent ceremony he received a letter of commendation from director Chris Christofferson and his name has been inscribed on a perpetual plaque on display in the university offices.

CSU may stiffen requirements

Community college and other transfer students soon may find it harder to be admitted to the 19 California State University campuses.

The plan to expand more demanding admissions requirements to include transfer students was presented at the March 11 meeting of the CSU board of trustees, which is expected to take final action on the proposal at the May 12 meeting.

If approved, the standards will go into effect the winter quarter of 1989.

"Even then, only 1,988 high-school graduates enrolling in a four-year or community college that fall will be subject to the new regulations," said Charles Lindahl, CSU's systemwide dean for educational support services and institutional relations. "There will be sufficient lead time to enable prospective transfer students affected by the policy to meet new course requirements."

Presently most community college transfer students need to have completed 56 semester units and the equivalent of four years of college preparatory English and two of mathematics to transfer to a CSU campus.

If the new requirements are extended to transfer students, 30 of their minimum 56 units must encompass CSU general education requirements in mathematics and English communication, and additional study in such areas as science, social science, and arts and humanities.

"The CSU trustees are considering this policy," explained Lindahl.

Developer to help finance additional staff

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A developer will help Upland finance a planner's salary in order to quickly process its applications for a 500-acre project.

The Pennhill Co. of Orange will reimburse the city about $6,000 — half the cost of hiring an associate planner through June, Planning Director Jeff Bloom said.

Last week the City Council agreed to spend $12,000 on the position to aid in processing the San Antonio Lakes project.

The staff member would also work the Planning Department's counter and concentrate more on long-term planning.

"Those three items had all kind of cropped up at the same time," Bloom said, adding that he had asked for the additional planner in his 1987-88 budget request.

When Pennhill made the offer of funding a position for the small but busy department, the city saw an innovative way to add the position sooner, he said.

After planning for the project is done, the city will keep the planner on at about $30,000 a year, Bloom said. The department presently consists of himself, two associate planners and one assistant planner, he said.

While no other local cities have used developer money to hire additional staff, planners said the practice is not uncommon. Some said it was not that different from hiring a consultant on a contract-basis and charging the developer.

"It wouldn't be any different than requiring an individual traffic analysis," said Jack Lam, Rancho Cucamonga's Community Development Director. "If the developer causes the need, they pay the city."

Both Rancho Cucamonga and Montclair have hired outside consultants in the past and charged the developer, planners said.

Although Montclair put an extra city employee in charge of the Montclair Plaza building inspections at a cost to the developer, it managed to plan the project without additional staff, said Robert Clark, director of Community Development.

Ontario City Planner Joyce Babicz said her city does not use developer money to pay for such planning services and warned that a possible conflict of interest could develop in that situation.

"You hire anybody and you take developer money for it, they're going to want you to spend all your time on it," she said.

Ruptured sewer line to be fixed

The Upland City Council has approved an emergency allocation of $50,000 to immediately repair a 60-year-old sewer line which ruptured, sending sewage into two nearby homes.

The council allocated the money from its sewer utility reserve, which has $2 million saved for this purpose, City Engineer Fred Blanchard said.

The line in the first alley east of Euclid Avenue, which runs between Arrow Highway and 16th Street, was inspected with the city's television cameras after the accident, Blanchard said.

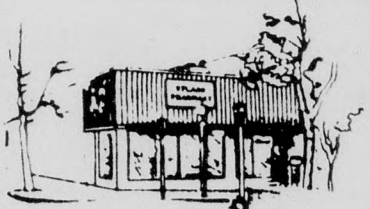

The camera pointed out more potential problems along the line, including broken sections of pipe and root intrusion, he pointed out in a memo.

The city engineer said his department plans a long-term repair of the entire line after the emergency work is completed.

Barker resigns as chairman of planners

David Barker has resigned his post as chairman of the Rancho Cucamonga Planning Commission, effective Tuesday.

In a brief letter recently sent to Rancho Cucamonga Mayor Dennis L. Stout, Barker wrote personal and professional responsibilities will "make it increasingly difficult to find the time to perform my duties as a planning commissioner in a responsible manner."

Stout responded to the letter by calling Barker's five-year tenure on the commission "a tremendous asset to the city."

Barker "is one of the major reasons this city is as well planned as it is," Stout said.

Barker replaced Stout as chairman of the Planning Commission when Stout was elected mayor in November.

Barker's replacement will be appointed by the City Council. Those interested in the appointment should apply at City Hall, 9320 Base Line Road.

Board lacked jurisdiction to approve quarry in R.C.

By Patrick McGreevy

The San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors did not have the jurisdiction to approve a quarry north of Rancho Cucamonga last August, City Attorney Jim Markman argued before a Superior Court judge recently.

Judge Kenneth Ziebarth set a further hearing for April 24 in his Rancho Cucamonga courtroom.

The city of Rancho Cucamonga is seeking a court order voiding the Board of Supervisors' 3-2 vote allowing Fourth Street Rock Crusher to develop and operate a 485-acre sand and gravel quarry north of Highland Avenue between Haven and Etiwanda avenues.

Markman told Ziebarth that in 1984 the county repealed and did not properly replace a state-certified ordinance setting forth the public hearing process required for mining permits.

Without that process in force, the eight public hearings held by the county during a 15-month period were not sanctioned by state law.

Markman also argued that the supervisors' action was vague, not backed by adequate findings, and did not sufficiently allow for the study of environmental impacts of two last-minute changes to the project.

John Nolan, the attorney for Fourth Street Rock Crusher, said the state-certified public hearing process was in force when the supervisors approved the project. He also disputed that the documents approved by the board were vague or incomplete.

"The knowledge of the supervisors as to what they were doing and what was proposed, that was complete," Nolan told Ziebarth. "The action was in accordance with certified procedures."

Ziebarth agreed that the key issue will be whether the county supervisors' action was taken with authority of the state-certified ordinance, and therefore was within their jurisdiction.

He asked for copies of the original 1981 ordinance including the state-required public hearing process for mining permits. Ziebarth also will receive the 1984 revision, as well as arguments from both sides on whether the revision excluded the public hearing process.

Markman said that without the process incorporated in county law, the hearings held on the project were a "courtesy."

He also challenged the environmental impact report on the project for not addressing the impacts of removing an asphalt batch plant from the project. The change was made at the last moment by the developer to appease the board.

Markman said removing the batch plant could result in additional truck trips on Highland Avenue as the company transports raw sand and gravel to a batch plant at another location. Those additional trips would further worsen the traffic hazard, noise and vehicle emissions, he said.

Nolan said Markman is unjustifiably speculating about the impact. He said the developer does not plan to build a batch plant at another location and has agreed to reduce the amount of sand and gravel mined at the site.

"We are reducing the scope of the project. We are narrowing the impacts, but now we are being damned for it," Nolan said. "It is absolutely not before anyone that there will be any removal to a batch plant."

Developer to help pay planner's salary

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A developer will help Upland finance a planner's salary in order to quickly process its applications for a 500-acre project.

The Pennhill Co. of Orange will reimburse the city about $6,000 — half the cost of hiring an associate planner through June, Planning Director Jeff Bloom said.

Last week the City Council agreed to spend $12,000 on the position to aid in processing the San Antonio Lakes project.

The staff member also would work the Planning Department's counter and concentrate more on long-term planning.

"Those three items had all kind of cropped up at the same time," Bloom said, adding that he had asked for the additional planner in his 1987-88 budget request.

When Pennhill made the offer of funding a position for the small but busy department, the city saw an innovative way to add the position sooner, he said.

After planning for the project is done, the city will keep the planner on at about $30,000 a

Trustees delay action on idea of transferring

By Marianne Aiken

The Central School District board of trustees took no action March 18 on a proposal to transfer 54 children from Dona Merced to Central School next September.

Parents from a Rancho Cucamonga neighborhood packed a school board meeting last Wednesday night, persuading the board to delay action until a 14-member committee studies other options.

Fifty-three people signed a petition opposing the move.

Parents complained they had no representation on the committee or knowledge of the proposed boundary change until they were notified by a letter from the school district last Wednesday.

Superintendent Frank Cosca said he would have asked the board to delay action anyway, since the committee's Feb. 26 vote by secret ballot on the proposal violated the Ralph M.

Brown Act, the so-called "open meeting" law.

Cosca said according to county counsel, although committee votes have been traditionally taken by secret ballot, board-appointed committees fall under the constraints of the Brown Act.

"What this has caused is a whole new process in school governance in San Bernardino County," said Cosca.

From now on, agendas of such committees will be posted 72 hours before their meetings and minutes must be kept of the meetings, he said.

Parents said they would have plenty to tell the committee at its next meeting.

Richard Holdaway, who has two children in Dona Merced School, objected to children being sent to Central School while construction is going on there next year.

"Unless the situation at Dona Merced is intolerable, we shouldn't make changes at this year, Bloom said. The department presently consists of himself, two associate planners and one assistant planner, he said.

While no other local cities have used developer money to hire additional staff, planners said the practice is not uncommon. Some said it was not that different from hiring a consultant on a contract-basis and charging the developer.

"It wouldn't be any different than requiring an individual traffic analysis," said Jack Lam, Rancho Cucamonga's Community Development Director. "If the developer causes the need, they pay the city."

Both Rancho Cucamonga and Montclair have hired outside consultants in the past and charged the developer, planners said.

Although Montclair put an extra city employee in charge of the Montclair Plaza building inspections at a cost to the developer, it managed to plan the project without additional staff, said Robert Clark, director of Community Development.

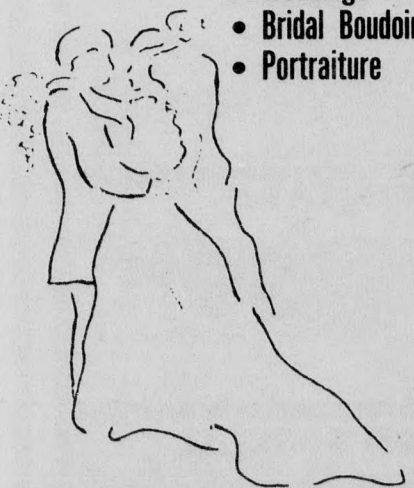

Ontario City Planner Joyce Babicz said her city does not use developer money to pay for such planning services and warned that a possible conflict of interest could develop in that situation.

"You hire anybody and you take developer money for it, they're going to want you to spend all your time on it,"

However, Babicz said Ontario could better afford to fund the planning services itself because its industrial and commercial projects usually bring money back into the city eventually.

Couple denied funds to help area's needy

By Mike Krapfl

Rancho Cucamonga residents Glenn and Sandra Swain say they need help in order to help.

So they asked the Rancho Cucamonga City Council last week for $8,000 of federal Community Development Block Grant funds to help them feed and shelter the West Valley's needy.

The council listened politely, but offered the Swains none of the $409,000 in federal funds the city expects to receive this year.

Mrs. Swain, who said she and her husband still are adjusting to the challenge of operating a homeless shelter and kitchen on Los Angeles' skid row for the Los Angeles City Council, later accused the Rancho Cucamonga Council of being blind to poverty in the West Valley.

Mayor Dennis L. Stout responded to the charge by saying, "I realize there's a problem she's trying to resolve, but the city has only limited dollars and we have to spend them as wisely as possible to do the most good for the community."

The council decided to spend most of the Block Grant money improving streets in Southwest Cucamonga.

"I understand the council wanting to do those improvements," Mrs. Swain said, "but I can't believe they don't want to address the fact this city needs social assistance time," Holdaway said.

Parents also raised some transportation questions.

"I have 5- and 7-year-old children and I'm not real thrilled about them crossing Foothill Boulevard to go to school," said Tim Pierce. "We just spent $106,000 on a home and a large consideration was we wanted to stay where we're at."

L.J. "Bud" Keeney H.O.T. Tips (House of Tools)

If you have one of the older jig saws you can convert pieces of broken bandsaw blades into jigsaw blades. Cut pieces into 6" lengths and trim the last few teeth off each end so blade will fit into the saw chuck. These blades are tough and extremely difficult to break.

When your white glue in the squirt bottle becomes thick & stringy and you can no longer use it for glue, make wood filler out of it. Take a portion out of the glue bottle and mix 50/50 with saw dust from the wood you are working with. After mixing, press the mixture into the holes and cracks in the wood. After this filler has hardened you will be able to work it with a file or sandpaper.

It is real handy to have a turn table to place your small pieces on for spraying. This turn table can be made from the turn table from an old TV table.

If you readers have any tips that others could use and would like them put in print, please send them to me and I'll see that your idea gets printed with your name included.

programs."

Stout said, "We're not blind to those needs, but the city doesn't have funds. I wish the Swains success in all their efforts to give help."

In response to the city's position, Mrs. Swain said, "A lady in Upland called me yesterday and told me she and her husband had been laid off and are two months behind in their rent."

"That lady's in trouble and needs help until she can get back on her feet. But we can't give it without the city's help."

Mrs. Swain said she and her husband have gone before the council twice before with similar results, and she lamented the $17 she and her husband spent to apply for the city-administered block grant.

"We could have given away a food bag with that money," she said.

The Swains, who head a group of 20 West Valley volunteers they call Concerned Citizens for Community Improvement, estimate they help 30 Rancho Cucamonga families each month with emergency food and shelter.

That's in addition to the 30 million pounds of groceries — not to mention shelter and hot meals — the Swain's estimate they've given away in South-Central Los Angeles since 1978.

Their most recent charitable challenge began three weeks ago when the Los Angeles City Council asked the Swains to operate a downtown shelter for the city until summer.

There, the Swains and their volunteers house and feed 100 of Los Angeles homeless.

New sewage line to be built in Upland

Upland and Chino Basin Municipal Water District agreed last week to build a new sewage line in the western half of the city and share the costs.

The new pipeline, which will hook up with an interceptor in Montclair along the San Antonio Channel, will take care of the city's additional sewage needs, Upland City Engineer Fred Blanchard said.

Already, the city has temporarily turned to Montclair to unload its extra sewage. The city pays Montclair to take about 50,000 gallons of it daily, Blanchard said.

The water district is willing to help out because it was obligated to pay for enlargement of the city's present sewer line on its east side.

Since the city chose to build a new line across town instead, the district will contribute the same amount.

Judge upholds cancellation of contract

By Patrick McGreevy

SAN BERNARDINO — A Superior Court judge last week upheld the county's recent cancellation of a contract that employed 900 housekeepers for the elderly and handicapped.

However, Judge Robert Krug set another hearing for April 3 to determine whether the county is doing everything possible to provide a continuation of in-home services to the program's clients.

The housekeepers were employed by Remedy Home and Health Services Inc., which on March 12 lost its county contract to provide in-home care for 3,600 elderly and disabled residents.

County officials canceled the contract, as required by the state, to avoid cost overruns caused by large increases in the demand for services.

To save money, the county Board of Supervisors called for the program's clients to individually employ the housekeepers for less pay and benefits than Remedy offered.

San Bernardino attorney William Dombi asked Krug to reinstate the contract so that the clients would not lose service. Many of the housekeepers have refused to switch to independent contracts with the clients because of the loss of pay and benefits, according to Fahari Jeffers of the United Domestic Workers of America.

Krug did not issue an order reinstating the contract.

"There will be continued monitoring of the program to make sure services are continued through the individual provider mode," said Deputy County Counsel Ruth Stringer.

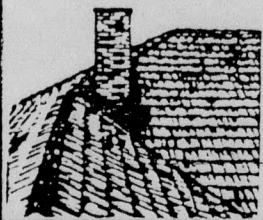

Meanwhile, union officials postponed an afternoon press conference in which they were planning to announce further political and legal actions against the county.

The postponement was attributed to attempts by union officials to resume negotiations with county officials over the contract.

Son doesn't live up to expectations

By Willard Abraham
Copley News Service

Q. I'm worried about our 11-year-old son because his school work is just average, and I have a feeling that he could do better. He never has been an outstanding student, but somehow I believe he is capable of higher performance.

Over the years his teachers have told me that he actually is working to his capacity, and just recently the school counselor has said the same thing.

I have difficulty accepting those opinions, and that is why I am writing to you for yours.

A. It is often so hard for parents to be objective and realistic about their own children because they seldom see them in situations where they can compare them with other youngsters. Teachers and counselors usually can. Another problem is that too often we view ourselves as "authorities" in education because we have had 12 or more years of it.

I tend to believe that most teachers and counselors know their business, so it may be time for you to relax.

It is important that parents correlate the "three A's" of Achievement, Ability and Aspiration so far as their children are concerned. It sounds as though your son's achievement and ability are on the same level, and it is necessary to bring the aspirations you have for him in line with them.

Periodic conversations that you arrange with his school counselors may be of value.

Q. We have our first baby, a wonderful little boy. Only one thing worries us about him — he touches all parts of his body, not often, but repeatedly, and without discrimination. Every part seems to interest his equally.

He also is attracted by mobiles, colorful pictures, and musical sounds, but it is only the touching and feeling factor that concerns us.

Should we be concerned, and if so, what should we do about it? We certainly don't want to hit his hands, look angry, or yell at him.

A. It really is interesting that if babies discover and explore their fingers and toes, their parents are all smiles. But if the sex parts are touched, that may be considered "bad," or at least something to worry about. If young children ask about the stars, the moon, or weather, that is just fine. But if they are curious about their bodies, that may seem to be something less laudatory.

Because what you hinted at is a baby's curiosity about his genitals, I've sent you a copy of an article of mine called "Where Did I Come From, Mama?" subtitled "A few words about sex and the young child."

Others can get a copy by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope with their request to me in care of P.O. Box 572, Scottsdale, AZ 85252. There is no cost.

Q. I am very skeptical of the grading practices in colleges based on the two college students in our family. Both do well academically and receive good grades, so that's not the problem.

The issue is other students who cheat on examinations, copy the papers of friends, and also get good grades.

Knowing how hard our sons work, I just don't think it's fair.

I've heard about this situation from them as well as their friends, all of whom resent the casual attitude of some instructors toward this matter.

A. Are you listening, profs? Is it a big problem? Even if not, is it worth watching more carefully? Apparently some conscientious students feel you should.
